He's powered it most of the way to Alaska and back like that, quietly, running at about 7 knots which is a civilized speed, burning hardly any gas.

Cruising Houseboat River Walker

Those of us in this school believe that the single most important rule of displacement hull design is that both the front half and the back half of a hull should have about the same volume. He used two 25 HP Hondas for that one. We'd want something that glues and takes fastenings easily; something that flexes and bends easily without weakening.
