The wall dividing the two atria is called the atrial septum. Medications Some medications or substances may cause your heart rate to change.

Accentuation of the aortic second sound results from hypertrophy of the left ventricle, increased arterial resistance as in arteriosclerosis with hypertension, or aortic aneurysm. After all possible signs have been elicited, the examination should be repeated with the patient sitting, standing, or leaning forward, and any variations from this change of position should be noted. Supraventricular tachycardia is a broad term that includes many forms of arrhythmia originating above the ventricles supraventricular in the atria or AV node.
