Sociology: Your compass for a new world 4th Canadian ed. Back stage or front stage, the self is always an artifact of the ongoing stratagems of accommodation and impression management involved in the social interaction with particular persons. Methods include symbolic interactionism and ethnomethodology, as well as later academic sub-divisions and studies like psychosocial studies, conversational analysis and human-computer interaction.

Chapter 22: Social Interaction

It is what occurs through social interactions and results in positive self-concepts when the desired first impression is offered and then successfully received.

Erving Goffman

In order to successful, the individual should support his front in the active state, with the necessary stage props. Turner 1986 Most of Goffmans attention goes to the different techniques and processes that are involved with the constitution of the self in interaction. In return, individuals are able to control the fine details and the major events of their life without being exposed to an overt amount of shame in the process.
