Ending exploitation and false self

Berlin — Support for local businesses and culture 30 March 2020 , 6. A number of states have launched efforts to support workforce development that is aligned with private sector needs. To date, the program has focused on building a pipeline of talent for a wide range of industries—from financial services and health care to information technology, business operations, and advanced manufacturing.

The New

It is also helping SMEs and the self-employed navigate teleworking technology use to continue activities from home. In my judgment, new-economy efforts will ultimately pose much more radical systemic challenges than many have contemplated.

OC Comment: There have been many discussions about this sort of measure over the last few years in many countries not least to assist in tax collection. Place the employment objective high on the national agenda and evolve a comprehensive plan to achieve full employment by identifying untapped growth potentials in agriculture, industry, exports and services.

The power to disrupt work and withhold their labour provides workers their most effective form of power in the workplace, virtual or otherwise. Gar Alperovitz is a participant in various systemic-change efforts, including some of the new-economy projects described in this article. According to a recent note by the OECD, sectors most at risk include manufacturing of transport equipment; construction; wholesale and retail trade; air transport, accommodation and food services; real estate services; professional service activities; and arts, entertainment and recreation see the annex for further information on the methods to estimate the share of jobs potentially at risk.

Employment strategies for developing countries

The COVID-19 pandemic could change the game for local development in many communities, and for many workers and firms it already has.

From pandemic to recovery: Local employment and economic development

For example, the American Council on Education has partnered with Credly, a company that manages digital credentials, to build a digital working transcript that tracks in-demand skills and assigns college credit for skills attainment. While their victories have been localised and small scale, they have successfully used these small victories to establish their credibility to other uncommitted drivers and bring them into organising to win concessions against giant multinational tech companies.
