Holcroft, Thomas 1745

As they are without human passions, so they seem to be without human relations.

English Prose Drama: Bibliography

It would be impossible to point out a class of authors, who have appeared in any of the Augustan ages of letters, more essentially brave and strong, - any who have spoken the language of thought and pas OLD ENGLISH DRAMATISTS. On the 28th there was a re-appearance in the city of the English Tragedienne Ada Ward.

Covent Garden

Sir Fergus Hume 1859-1932 was considered to be New Zealand's first mystery writer. This fact, taken in conjunction with the direct Court patronage extended to it, marks a curious stage in the progress of the Reformation in Scotland. Little did I hope To meet such worlds of comfort in thyself, This little, pretty body, when I, coming Forth of the temple, heard my beggar-boy, My sweet-faced, godly beggar-boy, crave an alms, Which with glad hand I gave, with lucky hand; And when I took thee home, my most chaste bosom Methought was filled with no hot wanton fire, But with a holy flame, mounting since higher, On wings of cherubins, than it did before.
