How To Handle Stress At Work In The Health Care Industry

Study population Quantitative data set The study was conducted in two acute care university hospitals, one in the Dutch- and one in the French-speaking part of Belgium, with 600 and 850 beds respectively. In addition, workload, decision latitude, and social capital have a mediating position between the nurse practice environment and work engagement dimensions.

Combating Stress

Line managers are responsible for ensuring that staff are aware of and abide by WHS requirements. According to the principles of evidence based practice, such decisions should be guided by high-quality scientific knowledge van Dijk et al.

A Guide to Managing Your (Newly) Remote Workers

Managers should concentrate on making reasonable adjustments at work, rather than understanding the diagnosis. It describes how long-term health conditions, work, money, technology and social media can cause us to feel stressed. Assuming that medical and surgical nursing units are relatively comparable in terms of staff nurse practice environment and nurse work characteristics such as workload, we might expect similar perceptions and experiences.
