It was only in the application of the orders that new combinations presented themselves, and this can be better understood when we refer to the monuments themselves. Over all, in the central space, stood the sanctuary built of blocks of white unblemished marble, rising from a level higher than the highest court, and surmounted by a roof overlaid with burnished gold, and flashing with golden spikes, the glory and crown of the whole terraced structure.

At Nineveh, the capital, which is about 250 m. This correspondence will become more manifest to the initiate as he penetrates the veils of our Mysteries.

San Giovanni in Laterano

The plan of the temple a rectangle delimited on all four sides by a colonnaded walkway reflects the typically Classical reverence for clarity, balance, and harmonious proportion. The railings were added by Pope Clement XII, and incorporate his heraldry. Of early work very little remains, owing to the general rebuilding in the 11th century; what is more remarkable, there is scarcely any trace of the result of the Byzantine occupation for so many centuries; the only exception being the church of San Gregorio at Bari, a small basilican structure in which the arches of the arcades separating the nave from the aisles are stilted like those of the Fondaco-dei-Turchi at Venice.

In the lower portion facing the east the rooms in which were two storeys below the level of the court on account of the slope of the hill was the private suite of apartments of the king and queen. Florence, Bologna, Vicenza, Udine, Genoa, and, above all, Venice, contain palaces and mansions of the 12th, 13th, 14th and 15th centuries, which for simplicity, utility and beauty far excel most of those in the same and other places of the three following centuries.
