Céci n'est pas un cinéphile

Like the storyteller, I narrate how, at a time when its gradual collapse is already underway, Hollywood tells and retells tales about itself. This elitism is precisely located, Rosenbaum argues, in the unfounded assumption that audiences aren't interested in films beyond the most familiar and most advertised, resulting in a perfectly contrived feedback loop in which a film is made for an assumed audience, the assumed audience is marketed to as a precise niche, and that niche is delivered at the box office.

The curious movie lover, entering a well-stocked general interest bookstore and searching the film bookshelves, is now veritably assaulted with a tsunami of books that, by their nature, present canons.

Rashna Wadia Richards: Re

That distinctive love, Susan Sontag lamented at the centennial marking the invention of cinema, has now ended. Another exchange, between Catherine Benamou and Lucia Saks whose chapter title, 'Circumatlantic Media Migrations', is suggestive of the entire book's outlook, represents what I believe is an unprecedented discussion linking the challenges of filmmaking and cinephilia in South Africa and Latin America. The new and democratic visual art forms of the twentieth century, MacCabe suggests, offer a similar opportunity to reimagine our notions of language and culture.
