From the usually dark waters of the tarn you can look up at the imposing skyline formed by Sharp Edge. Sharp Edge offers considerably more exposure than Striding Edge and if courage fails you here, or if the wind is blowing strongly, you are advised to take the easier safe track on the opposite side of the cwm which rises across Scales Fell to the summit ridge.

Wainwright Memorial Walk

Al loved it so much he got one as well, but in a different colour.

Tea & Tarns

Crossing the summits of High Stile and High Crag you drop to Scarth Gap before climbing again to Haystacks, one of Wainwright's favourite peaks and the place he chose as his last resting place.

Wainwright's Remote Lakeland

Many years ago I received as a gift a coffee table book, 'Wainwright's Tour in the Lake District, Whitsuntide 1931'. It can potentially add significant distances to a planned walk as you must detour to get around the hags.

We can organise and purchase food and drinks for the trip.

Thus you have passed from Wasdale to Langdale without hardly noticing except for a little tiredness in the legs. However, having climbed all 214 of the Wainwrights at least once, almost all twice, and some 20 times or more, I am happy to limit my ambitions for the walk.

Tea & Tarns

The extra charge for this is £60 per person and includes route cards for an additional walk. We choose places directly on the route or within easy walking distance of it and if we ever have to transfer you because of limited availability, we will always contact you to discuss this and never just leave you to find out later. On this itinerary you will spend two nights in Buttermere, Wasdale and Langdale which in each case also provides a welcome respite from constantly changing hotel.
