Théophile Delcassé and the Making of the Entente Cordiale

Suspicion of the growing entente between France and England soon arose in Germany, and in 1905 German assertiveness was shown in a which was forced on in the matter of French policy by Delcassé personally, a sore point with Germany. In 1898 Delcassé had to deal with the delicate situation caused by Captain Marchand's occupation of the town of in the the for which, as he admitted in a speech in the chamber on 23 January 1899, he accepted full responsibility, since it arose directly out of the Liotard expedition; and in March 1899 he concluded an agreement with Britain by which the difficulty was finally adjusted, and France consolidated her vast colonial empire in North-West Africa. After the explosion there was a debate in the Chamber of Deputies in which the honour of Jaurès and the responsibility for the use of unstable powder by the navy was questioned.
