Populist Party

Both parties were convinced that the election system was fundamentally unfair. Although these movements were not united or always well-organized, they did find initial success in many state elections. This setback resulted from two factors: the decision by many Alliance members to remain in the Democratic Party and the failure of the state's strong , the overwhelming majority of whose members were black, to support the Populists.

The Election of 1896: Populism Vs. The Gold Standard

The late 1800s represented their heyday. When the Democrats chose as their candidate the dynamic orator and supporter of silver William Jennings Bryan of Nebraska, the Populists fused with the Democrats to avoid splitting their vote.
