Roh Moo

Public antipathy to the United States was prevalent in 2002, particularly evoked by the , where two South Korean middle school girls were crushed to death by a U. Roh's suicide followed the suicides of a number of high-profile figures under corruption investigations in Korea in recent years, including the former secretary of Prime Minister Kim Young-chul, former Busan mayor Ahn Sang-Young who committed suicide while in prison , Park Tae-young, former governor of , and , a former executive. The remainder of Roh's term was characterized by a number of campaigns pursued to varying degrees of success and completion.
