Norman

For this reason there was no corner of his wide domain that did not for many years after his death stand in better relation to progress, and to the influence of religion, the most potent civilizer of men.

Sarah Orne Jewett (Jewett, Sarah Orne, 1849

After this, Flanders and Normandy were very friendly together, and before long they formed a most significant alliance of the royal houses. As for the baby-widow, she afterward became the wife of the Count of Flanders, Baldwin de Lisle, and she was the mother of Matilda, who was the wife of William the Conqueror.
