These issues are creating problems and making things more difficult for around the world to function at optimal levels. Trade Agreements Countries that want to increase international trade aim to negotiate.

5 Major Current Trends in Foreign Trade

Democratic governments derive their power from the people of the country, either by direct referendum called a direct democracy or by means of elected representatives of the people a representative democracy. More broadly, to maintain confidence in global markets and co-operation, there is a need to avoid further escalation in ongoing trade tensions. Such restrictions make international trade cumbersome; further, because the restrictions may change at any time, the ability to sustain international trade is always uncertain.
