Modern Haskell: making sense of the type system

With TypeScript being a gradual type system, we can gently encourage the programming language to give us more insights into our code.

Wheeler & Wheeler, TypeSense: Making Sense of Type on the Computer, 3rd Edition

For example, to study object recognition, Margaret Livingstone, a neurobiologist at Harvard Medical School in Boston, measures the neuronal activity in the temporal lobe of monkeys as they look at different items. To see many working charts, check out the CNCF. Having entered sensory science in the early 1980s as a graduate student studying neuroscience at the University of London, McKernan has seen the trends change from her studies of neurotransmitter release at single synapses in the rat brain to the ability to now analyze the activity of hundreds of neurons at once.
