The British Government and the Saint Domingue Slave Revolt, 1791

The imposing statue of Nelson unveiled in March 1813 and supported by a public subscription of over 2500 pounds sterling within a few weeks was a direct response to presumed thoughts of a later French invasion. In Barbados in 1816, an armed struggle was led by an African-born enslaved man called Bussa who was head ranger on a plantation.

Fetishism and the Moral Marketplace: How Abolitionist Sugar Boycotts in the 1790s Defined British Consumers and the West Indian

In England the pamphlets chronicling the true state of slavery in the Caribbean continued to be published, criticising the morals of the planters, and their treatment of the enslaved, and detailing runaways and small uprisings. The interest of the consumer, as well as that of the trader, was a point which the House ought never to lose sight of.
