The new Medicare Benefits Schedule (MBS) items pave the way for a range of other Australian Government mental health initiatives to be implemented, including $191.6 million over five years for mental health nurses to support private psychiatrists and GPs in caring for people with severe mental illness.

Relationship to the Better Outcomes in Mental Health Care initiative
The Better Outcomes in Mental Health Care (BOiMHC) Program has been a successful foundation for the new COAG Mental Health Better Access to Psychiatrists, Psychologists and General Practitioners through Medical Benefits Scheme Initiative.

The Australian Government introduced the BOiMHC Program in July 2001 in recognition of the important role of general practitioners in managing mental health problems. Initial funding of $120.4 million over four years was allocated to the Program with a further $142.7 million provided over four years to continue and expand the Program to 2008-09.

The BOiMHC Program aims to improve the quality of care provided through general practice to Australians with a mental illness. Divisions of General Practice act as fundholders for the Access to Allied Psychological Services (ATAPS) component of the BOiMHC Program. ATAPS enables GPs to refer clients to appropriately qualified allied health professionals (psychologists, mental health nurses, social workers, occupational therapists and Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander health workers) who deliver Focussed Psychological Strategies.

Divisions of General Practice are allocated an annual budget to broker allied mental health services for patients of general practitioners who would not otherwise access these services. Divisions are able to adopt a model that best suits their local arrangements and as a result a number of service delivery models are being used across the country.

ATAPS provides an alternative referral pathway to Medicare funded psychological services for people seeking assistance, via their GP for treatment of their mental illness.

Earlier this year the Australian Government announced that funding for the BOiMHC Program is to be ongoing.

Stigma in mental health: clients and professionals

Certificate of attendance will be provided to all participants who complete an evaluation at the end of the webinar. Both studies highlight the importance of staff being approachable, non-judgemental, engaging, empathic, respectful of clients' wishes and needs, and the formation of a collaborative relationship.

Perceptions of professional role in community mental health nurses: The interplay of power relations between nurses and mentally ill individuals

Barriers to positive relationships included ineffective and negative communication, a lack of trust, a lack of safety in terms of staff as ineffective in preventing violence, and as perpetrators themselves, and the use of coercion by staff. However a number of authors have identified difficulties with the current knowledge of the patient experience of inpatient psychiatric services.

Dual Relationships, Multiple Relationships, Boundaries, Boundary Crossings, & Boundary Violations in Psychotherapy, Counseling & Mental Health

The implications of this research are twofold: while improvements in the environment in psychiatric hospitals are welcome, emphasis should be placed on developing practice to enhance the formation of therapeutic relationships with patients to have a positive impact on service users' experiences. Case presentations will serve to illustrate how clinicians can better recognize this condition and develop more effective strategies and interventions.
